The present invention relates to an image display apparatus such as a plasma display panel, and more particularly, to a method and apparatus for driving a plasma display panel. Plasma display panels (PDPs) have a small depth and slim size and a high resolution. As such, plasma display panels have recently been used as substitutes for conventional cathode ray tubes (CRTs) in TVs, OA appliances and monitors. FIG. 1 is a circuit diagram of a conventional image display apparatus. Referring to FIG. 1, the conventional image display apparatus includes a plasma display panel PDP, a panel driver 20, a controller 22, a memory 24, and a timing controller 26. The controller 22 controls the panel driver 20 and the memory 24. The memory 24 stores the color information of a screen to be displayed on the plasma display panel PDP. The panel driver 20 receives and processes input data from the controller 22. The controller 22 controls the panel driver 20 based on the input data to operate the plasma display panel PDP. The memory 24 controls the controller 22 to operate the panel driver 20. FIG. 2 is a circuit diagram of the conventional panel driver. Referring to FIG. 2, the panel driver 20 includes a first switching device 21, a second switching device 23, a third switching device 25, a data latch 27, a latch buffer 28, a D-latches 29 and 31, a latch controller 30, and output driving elements, I-driving elements 33 and 35, and N-driving elements 32 and 34. When an input enable signal IEWB is enabled, the first switching device 21 transfers a picture data signal SD input from the memory 24 to the latch buffer 28. When a reset signal RST is enabled, the reset signal RST transfers the output of the latch buffer 28 to the first switching device 21. The second switching device 23 transfers the picture data signal SD from the latch buffer 28 to the data latch 27. When the reset signal RST is enabled, the second switching device 23 transfers the reset signal RST to the data latch 27. The third switching device 25 is controlled by the output signals of the first switching device 21 and the second switching device 23. When the input enable signal IEWB is enabled, the third switching device 25 transfers the reset signal RST to the D-latches 31. When the reset signal RST is enabled, the D-latches 31 transfer the reset signal RST to the N-latches 32 and 34.

Wes Moore, an attorney for the Navajo Nation, addresses members of the United States Congress about the Navajo-Hopi Land Settlement Act. Flanked by tribal leaders and congressional staffers, two U.S. Senators and a U.S. Congressman on Wednesday called for the Navajo Nation and the Hopi Tribe to enter into negotiations to resolve a century-old land dispute. Joseph Smith, the Democrat from Utah who is chairman of the Senate Indian Affairs Committee, and a Republican, Republican from Arizona, Doug Lamborn, said the two tribes should commit to "commit to a negotiated settlement to this dispute." "This is an ongoing dispute and it will come to a head sooner or later," said Smith. He said the tribes are right at the point of no return. "I don't think it's going to change on its own," said Smith. "I think it's time for them to enter into negotiations." The Nation and the Hopi Tribe have been at odds for a century over a 50-square-mile parcel of land in northeastern Arizona known as the Gold King Mine area. In 2009, President Barack Obama ordered the Interior Department to settle the land dispute between the two tribes through a negotiated settlement. But the Nation never formally adopted that decision and the dispute went to court. Both tribes are seeking the U.S. Supreme Court to resolve the issue. On Monday, a three-judge panel of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is scheduled to issue a ruling in a lawsuit that was filed by Hopi to stop the Nation from using the Gold King Mine area. Both Smith and Lamborn said they were hopeful that the decision would lead the tribes to open up negotiations. "It's been a long time," said Lamborn. "It's time to move on," he said. "I think the fact that they're here today and the Congress wants to make it possible for them to negotiate with the tribes, that's a step forward." Lamborn also said the tribes could agree to negotiate a settlement of the dispute in the future. "They can get there," he said. Navajo Nation Attorney Wes Moore said the tribes could use the legislative proposal to give
